Fetch me the bellyboard, Mavis, I'm going in... No let-up for the Great British summer as beach-lovers make a splash with back-to-basics plywood

By Daily Mail Reporter
Last updated at 11:17 AM on 6th September 2010

Even when the sun disappears behind the clouds and the skies turn grey, here in England there are always those who will take advantage of beach-time activity.

And that's exactly what happened today at the World Bellyboard Championships at Chapel Porth in Cornwall.

Over a hundred bellyboard surfers of all ages and all on traditional wooden bellyboards gathered for the annual charity event organised for the National Trust and the Royal National Lifeboat Institution (RNLI).
Brave the cold: The annual Bellyboard event in Cornwall was attended by people of various ages

Enter into the unknown: The grey skies failed to deter people from entering the waters in Cornwall

The World Belly Boarding Championship (WBBC) was first started in 2002 at Chapel Porth by Martyn Ward and Chris Ryan as a memorial contest to the late Arthur Traveller, a Londoner who holidayed with his wooden board at Chapel Porth every year.

From its humble beginnings with only a handful of competitors it has now grown into the World Championships we see today with over 200 entrants.
The boards should be made of wood, with fibreglass and composites acceptable in the expression sessions as are fins, flippers, small skegs, Alaia boards and Paipo’s.

However, organisers expect a more traditional 1ft wide plywood board to be considered for the Arthur Traveller Memorial Trophy.
Time to shine: It's the men's turn next into the water at the annual championships

Since the 1920s Cornwall has been the focus for surfing in the UK when surfers originally used the wooden 'belly boards' on which they would lie down - only later did they start standing up and the modern sport was born.

Robyn Davies, contest director and NT surf guru said: 'The event has gone truly global in recent years with entrants from Australia, New York, San Francisco and British Virgin Islands.

'It continues to grow from strength to strength, yet we hope remain connected to it's fun roots.'

All smiles: One man turns tide and decides to board back to shore
Mugshot: The males pose for the camera, in colourful outfits, before they enter the water.

Slide 'n' splash: Not to be outdone, the ladies try to impress in the manoeuvres.

In the competition there are approximately 20-30 heats of up to eight people per heat. The length of heat to be 10 or 15 minutes depending on the number of entrants.

Judges look for the length of ride, wave selection, change of direction, style and the most radical manoeuvres.
in the most critical part of the wave, i.e. the curl.
My belly board was called the fleeing fly and my dad's was the flying porpoise made in the garage and it had one hell of a bend on the front made by steaming the board then sticking the front under the front tyre of the car and slowly bending it up. It is nice though to look at the pictures and see how blooming cold the water looks, as I sit in 30C temps with the gulf temperature at 30C as well. Nice and toasty.

- liz, now Florida USA, 06/9/2010 16:13

when i was younger i remember going to cornwall and having a bellyboard, they are good pictures and hope you all had fun and the waves were good for you and all the competitors i know how they feel not having a wetsuit on as we never had them when we was younger, i got rid of my bellyboard so got a bodyboard instead, pity the weather was not very good for you. wish i had been there to watch them all.

- steph darley, immingham, 06/9/2010 13:29

I live in herefordshire. When I was a kid we took plywood board with us to the beach in summer, and in the winter the same boards became snowboards. If the going was slow, we would stand. If it was fast on hard frozen snow, we would lie on them, getting to really fast speeds as so little resistance. Brill.

- David Smith, Leominster, Herefordshire, 06/9/2010 11:24

These pictures take me back to my first surfing days back in Cornwall.....wonderful times!

- marisol, Wilts, 06/9/2010 11:15
This is the sort of thing I miss - living in a country choc-a-bloc with eccentrics! Long may they reign.

- ex-pat, Portugal, 06/9/2010 08:38

Click to rate _ _ Rating  44

Report abuse

The views expressed in the contents above are those of our users and do not necessarily reflect the views of MailOnline.